Username	Comment	Gender	Language Variables
cqz	[to] Get free shit on runescape	Male*	• Short Comment • Improper Grammar • Cusses
Canazza	Did it in World of Warcraft by accident. Someone whispered [to] me "are you a girl?" and I got confused, thinking he was asking about my character. Internally I said "I know elves are pretty effeminite but you should still be able to tell", externally I replied "Yes" I then started getting presents in the in-game mail. I had to let the kid off gently. [edit] RIP pun thread, but it is a /serious thread so fair dos.	Male*	• Long Comment • Improper Grammar redtit64	My friend has been playing WoW for years. He only plays girl characters and finds guys to pay for his subscription and expansions. Hes a genius	Male*	• Short Comment • Improper Grammar Beautifulcreat-ure86	I know two obese women with children that play at least sixteen hours a day. Both unattractive and lazy. Their kids are 6, 10 and 12 collectively but have grown up playing outside on their own because their mom's don't move from the computers for shit. It gets better. "Linda" met a man thru WoW and they started online dating. He came from out of town to be with her and they talked about marriage....until he caught her cheating on him with some other WoW online player....he left her and the other guy came in and they got married and moved to san Antonio. Weird shit. She isn't even attractive; not trying to be mean but he is okay looking. Last I saw they have a 3 bedroom home and one of them is exclusively for them to play. They have 4 huge screens and these expensive kit keyboards. Crazy shit. Their lives revolve around the game...the kids, not so much. It's sad. I don't talk to them anymore.	Female*	• Long comment • Comments on physical attractive-ness • Cusses • Statement
julia0143	About a decade ago, when my little brother was in his early twenties and living with my mom at the time, he	Female*	• Long comment • Proper Grammar played WoW every waking hour he wasn't working. He started dating someone on there. One day, he gave the entire family the middle finger, told us all to fuck off, and announced his girlfriend had sent him a plane ticket and that he was "out of here." She turned out to be well over 100 pounds heavier than she had claimed, and twice the age. It was a one-way ticket. The best part, is that she had a son my brother's own age, and he would stomp around the house slamming doors in my brother's face, the same way my brother had treated my mom's dates/boyfriends. He didn't have any money, so he was stuck there, several states away. He had to beg my mom's forgiveness over the phone, and got a return ticket from her about a week later. We'll never let him live this one down. It was hilarious.		● Unapolog-etic

Svenhoek86	Let me just say, as a decent to slightly above average looking dude who had no confidence growing up, you instantly latch onto the first girl to give you attention. If you don't have the confidence to make a girl pay attention to you, it's still really hard to find anyone, and your standards erode more and more over time. Signals don't really exist either. Its easy to spot with your friends, but when a girl does the same things to you your mind will twist it really quick. It's like you run it over in your head a hundred times before making your move, and each time it gets more and damaged until you just don't do anything. Depression sucks.	Male	● Long comment ● Uses slang ● Statement ● Improper Grammar ● Assertive
Buckeyelegend-44	Had to do it once as an exercise in a computer crimes class. We made our accounts as 12-14 year old girls for a chat room. Within 5-10 mins, there are guys messaging you to turn your cam on, blah blah blah, they would pop up, dick out, just trying to rub one out to you after you tell them youre a young girl. I had a guy from India willing to pay for my flight over THAT DAY to meet him. Then we told them we werent really a 13 year old girl and that their information would be turned over to the police.	Male*	● Long Comment ● Casual Language ● Vulgar Language

	Good times
JdotAllan	When I was at university we were doing a project on communities and online communities. Our group got assigned to look into and research Second Life as at the time it was still quite a new and current 'thing' and as I was the one with the best laptop I got the job of playing it. We drafted some questions we'd try answer and some kinda short surveys people may answer for data for our presentation at the end and I made a male character that looked like 'me' and jumped in. After visiting a few social hubs and numerous attempts and hours no one would really help out or wouldn't give us much more than stupid answers. One of the people in the group thought it was just me and came and watched and realised people were kind of unhelpful towards us. We re-rolled my character as a female, tall, slim, blonde and acted a bit more like a video-game noob. We got more help almost instantly than I'd got in hours. People were hearing our conversations and coming over to volunteer their answers and opinions. Asking if we needed things, showing us places to go. One guy bought us some outfits and gave us some in-game currency and let us have access to his house. So yeah we pretended to be a female to get a project done.	Male	• Long comment • Proper Grammar
Stakz12	I once did it online, I was bored as hell and I wanted to see the extent that guys were willing to go. I got like $300 dollars for a picture of me... It was fake but he still sent it... I refunded it and told him. He got pissed as shit. Funny as hell.	Male*	• Short comment • Cusses • Vulgar language
Thecutest-nerd	My boyfriend says he picks female characters because he'd rather stare at a girl's ass while playing than a guy's. You gotta own It! If cross dressing is what you wanna do and it will make you happy, you should give it a shot :)	Female*	• Short comment • Supportive • Casual Language • Emoticon • Cusses kev_the_noble	I made a fake account on a dating site, just to see what girls actually have to deal with. I deleted it after I saw over 40 messages and far to many dick pictures.	Male*	• Short Comment • Vulgar Language PaperCutPupils	I pretended to be a girl in a chat room once. I couldn't believe how aggressive the guys were. I only did it for 10 minutes before I had to get out. I had no idea.	Male*	• Short Comment • Apologetic • Proper Grammar

Aeolian_Epona	As a female and previous online gamer, this is the reason I only would use my mic around people that I'd been playing with for awhile, or if I absolutely had to to quickly alert to something in-game. There's definitely some sharks out there but I met some decent gaming friends too.	Female	• Short comment • Frustrated • Proper Grammar • Assertive
Diggary-Donald-son2	My girlfriends friend shown me her tinder and okcupid messages once, only a days worth, but my god it creeped me out so much. Old guys saying "I know you said no over 30s but I'm only 57", dick pics (some still with website addresses on the bottom, learn to crop), men kicking off because she didn't reply within five minutes etc etc. Must have been 100 messages and only Four or five were genuine conversation starting messages like "hey, a fellow rock climber!" And then talk about genuine interests. Most were the shit examples above, offering sex or creepy shit like "I could spend my life looking at your smile and an eternity staring into the beautiful depth of your eyes". Women, I feel for you.	Male	• Long Comment • Proper Grammar • Casual language • Vulgar language • Statement • Cusses • Supportive • Apologetic propuntmma	Back in the day when I still played online poker I used to pose as a girl because male players often wouldn't take them as seriously - especially if you played tight-aggressive. Anything helps to get an edge, you know. The change in the players' general behavior was very noticeable. A lot of flirting all of a sudden. Of course not from the majority, but still - it gave me a glimpse into how aggravating things can be for women sometimes.	Male*	• Long Comment • Statement • Supportive • Apologetic