

“GOOD

ART

IS

POLITICAL

”

she was a huge advocate for using art as activism. Design and media are the first things people see. It's a universal language and a creative outlet for people to talk about pressing social and political people. Art isn't political bickering of our president on Twitter but the voices of real people and their experience. Julianna states that "our generation has a common shared experience of resilience even in such tumultuous times." However, issues like racism and sexism have become such a "norm" and activists, including Julianna, are fighting to not accept the norm anymore as an act of resistance. Her activism is an act of both resistance and resilience as she fights for her rights in marginalized communities and is still able to speak for herself and others.