1. What did you like about this workshop?

- It educated many who needed education.
- A chance to get feedback from others and interact about serious situations.
- How everybody was open about their feelings. How important women are. They should be more appreciated. Respected more.
- They defined for us what these topics were.
- Raising awareness about sexual harassment/assault, etc.
- The guy in the black sweater (forgot name) was very impressive in relating to us.
- Information
- Presented beneficial info.
- It was fine.
- Provide a necessary service and valuable information and discussion.
- Issues that were brought up.
- It let us know about the laws/definition of certain things about this workshop.
- The discussion was straight forward. Also, participants brought up "real" issue.
- I liked everything about the workshop. It was very informative. I liked the question and answer period.
- It was educating.
- The discussion.
- Amount of info. Visual aids/film.
- The honesty and genuine interest the facilitator showed to the subject. The open atmosphere.
- Comments on the existence of false accusation. Expressing views from male perspective.
- Insight on being able to identify abuse.
- Detail about what was considered sexual assault by law.
- To clear up some of the topics that I didn't understand before.
- Good discussion.
- Honest. Did what it had to.
- The presenters were very articulate and did a good job of presenting the material. Power wheel.
- Being educated about all of the things that goes along with each topic.
- We were informed on the legal ramifications of not being careful and being in bad situations.
- Open discussion about issues.
- It was fun. It went by faster than I thought. Also, good information was discussed.
- It as informative.
- Facilitators not offended by our views.
- It was a lot of info that was new to myself.
- It was very educational.
- Presented various scenarios that are real life occurrences. Explained laws well about sexual assault and violence.
- I enjoyed the various discussions on the different boundaries of these issues. I also enjoyed the questions and examples.
- How well I was informed about the laws.

--The way the people presented the information in a "legal" type of way.
--It taught us new opinions and viewpoints from a view that we may or may not have seen before.
--It enlightened me on some subjects that I wasn't clear on.
--The videos.
--The frankness of the discussions.
--Videos. Visual aids.
--I thought it was good that they tell us what the consequences are.
--It helped me to clarify the law on the whole subject.
--It gave me a better perspective of what, how, when women think about.
--The openness of the group.
--The information.
--We talked about different topics.
--It was informing.
--Information provided in an organized manner.
--Videos.
--Talking about women's perspective and how sexual harassment occurs.
--I was really able to see the female's perspective on the issues.
--Male and female perspective.

2. What did you dislike about this workshop?

--That the groups were not split up upon knowledge levels.
--Time length.
--Too many questions left up in the air.
--I think the main purpose of the workshop and raising awareness and how to help limit sexual abuse was not fully covered. I think there were too many "scenario" questions.
--Workshop went well, I have more of a problem against societal double standards. The male is automatically wrong way too often.
--Length.
--A little long.
--Too long.
--Facilitating people had strong opinions and rarely listened to a differing opinion.
--That didn't attack the female's position.
--The general tone was that men are more responsible for what occurs sexually.
--The temperature of the room was too cold.
--It was repetitive.
--The video did not relate to us. Was more for older people (men) with domestic abuse problems.
--Very one sided. A lot more violence is occurring against men.
--Biasness. Guy is always wrong.
--That they did not have men on their paid staff. That they did not offer women ways to stop the assault (physical or etc.) besides talking, getting help from others.
--Video was boring and didn't really reflect ideas that we are affected by.
--Video tape.
--Too much unrelated debate.
--I wasn't told until the day before. I had other things to do.
--Too long. Too many personal thoughts. In fact, tons of the same comments.
--The off-track comments. Sticking to the goals would allow for more to be accomplished.
--Once we got going we were not able to run with it. We got cut off. It was also hard to really identify with a female taking the reigns. There needs to be more males.

--Negative bias towards men.
--It was too long. Could be organized a little better, a lot of what was said was repeated over and over.
--It could have been more from a male's POV.
--I think a lot of it was insulting to my morals and intelligence. A little long.
--I thought that most of it was insulting to my intelligence. Took too long.
--The information was . .(?) . . one-sided into a female perspective. I believe that more emphasis should be on rape outside of parties and people should be told to avoid parties in general.
--Our director often got frustrated with us, but it's understandable b/c she doesn't know the atmosphere we're under all the time.
--The facilitator was intimidated and didn't understand the position, as athletes, that we are put in.
--The clear definitions of everything wasn't there. Too many issues that can be debated.
--All of the talk.
--The generalizations that were made.
--Talking was not very stimulating. Seemed as the leader was biased towards her subject.
--The facilitator would change the subject when one of us brought up a good point to contradict their views.
--It seemed as though they were on the defense. That instead of trying to relate they were defending.
--Overall it was very well done.
--The video needs to relate to college students.
--Not enough focused on men. I felt that the woman was always right.
--The facilitator had only 1 point of view.
--The lady had only one point of view.
--Rape video was not very realistic. Material not presented from an athlete's perspective.
--Women have complete power whether or not they were consenting or not.
--Women have the power to say whether you raped them or not you have no power. It was too much influence by how the woman has all the power.

3. Please comment on how well the material was presented:

--This material was very well presented and I came out more educated about women and men in violence.
--Fine. (2)
--Good (5)
--Very good.
--Presented well. (11)
--Very well (4)
--Very well, everything was answered.
--Not much depth was gone into.
--Presented well. I got a lot out of it.
--It was presented normal.
--The material was presented in an orderly manner and the facilitators were prepared to discuss the material and answer questions.
--Sarah and the gentleman handled all questions very informally professional.
--Made me realize how fine a line a man can walk at times.
--Very clear.
--Well, but too many of the same comments.
--Organization. Perspectives.
--Sarah seemed to be a little timid toward us. Also she seemed a little biased. But I guess maybe she was just trying to play the "devils advocate."

--It was presented in a very good manner. It was clear and open to thoughts and questions.
--Presented well and professionally but unprepared for the questions coming from the specific audience.
--I felt that they responded to the questions well.
--The material was presented in a very efficient and informative manner.
--The material was presented in a good and efficient way.
--The material was presented very thorough.

4. What would you suggest for us in the future?

--It was a good as it can be with our group.
--Keep up the good work!
--I personally don't take stock into the violent wheel. Is it correct = yes. I think it would be better discussed than in that form.
--Shorter program.
--More attention on emotions and laws in depth.
--Tell stories related to your group.
--More men on staff.
--To have a video with characters [characters] in it that represent the audience in which you are presenting it to.
--Shorter presentation.
--Different video.
--Do you offer prevention? Maybe it is not the right way to react, but women should not provoke it.
--Develop a program that emphasizes the strength women possess [possess] and give them ways to stop the violence.
--Using video that the members of audience can relate to.
--More time.
--People did not seem to be normal. I could not relate.
--To get more presented.
--I thought the scenarios were good and the discussion was good.
--Shorten program.
--More interactive material. More time.
--More males intervention. Try to recruit more males if you could.
--Inform people evenly from the male and female POV.
--Not such obvious answers to scenarios.
--A better video.
--Nothing really, I felt that it was well presented.
--Get more real. Don't be like Mrs. Clever.
--A video of scenarios that we discussed and then discuss what and who was in the wrong or right.
--Keep having good discussions.
--To concentrate more on how a woman should not put herself in the situation, and how the man could keep from the situation, i.e. no drinking, etc.
--Understand the group which you are coming into and be prepared to answer the questions given. Even if your viewpoint isn't the same.
--Not so long, got boring.
--Do not attack so much.
--Listen more to the audience.
--Break it up into smaller and shorter groups so that it isn't so long and drawn out.
--Possibly more handouts.
--Make sure you get everyone's opinion.

- Not to be biased.
- Look at both sides.
- Try to look at a situation in more than one way.
- Have a question period at the end only.
- Cover both sides.
- Keep telling people about SAPAC but focus more on man's perspective.
- More time to discuss and conclude at end of session with everyone together.
